Everyone knows that CVS sells their chewing gum and candy bars at the checkout counter. Likewise, no McDonalds on Earth sells carne asada. Not in either of their operations manuals does the word “autonomy” ever appear. Product placement and menu creation is not the store manager’s domain. Why then does our school district allow for the delivery of arbitrary and capricious pronouncements and mandatory practices that may (or may not) come from a flawed message delivery system or the personal ego of a local administrator?

Like the game of telephone where the dad’s request to throw out the garbage, filtered through two or three family members, becomes “car’s in the garage” important and meaningful direction is coming from the Superintendent’s office and being reduced to distorted and mixed messages to the instructional staff expected to implement them.

We must create and adhere to a message delivery system that respects buy-in from affected staff—those directly expected to implement the message. Imagine a system where after a committee of school-based teachers and principals makes a grade level decision on the delivery of a subject, that decision is modeled by and for coworkers where they can calm panic or resolve misinterpretations before they spread across the district.

Treatment for a broken arm involves resetting the bone in place and immobilizing it in a cast or splint to allow it time to heal. That’s it, it’s that simple. Under normal circumstances the treatment doesn’t vary. Physicians, who learn from each other and share their best practices, long ago decided that this was the best way to treat a broken arm, and they all said “we’re good”.

Why then is a debunked and often unrealistic practice like Aggressive Monitoring still required in some schools in this district and not in others sometimes only minutes away from each other? Who hasn’t gotten the message? I believe we can create a messaging system that fosters the delivery of great instructional and professional services to our students—the creation of the Framework Evaluation Committee is a great step forward in the right direction, as educators I know we will learn from it.

More on the historic importance of the Framework Evaluation Committee to come.

Prescription/Benefits Concerns

We have had members reach out to us saying that AETNA told them that certain prescriptions covered under Benecard would not be covered or require different procedures. We had the same issues a few years ago when we switched to Benecard. In general, these problems are usually quickly fixed. When a prescription or benefits provider changes, they have to offer “the same or better” coverage. If you are having an issue, use the below contact information and CC: mmaillaro@newarkteachersunion.com
